New 'Plot' Hatched Outside Courtroom

By HOWARD JACOBS

AN ATTACHE at criminal courts building related that he was approached by an agitated damsel who said she had overheard a murder plot discussed by two photographers. One, she averred, whispered to the other outside the courtroom where the Dean A. Andrews Jr. case was being heard: "I'll shoot Andrews." "No," said the other conspiratorially, "I'll shoot Andrews. You are supposed to shoot Garrison." The attache explained to his abashed informant that there was no conspiracy afoot, that "shoot," in the parlance of the click clique, meant to "photograph."
